Dear FDA:

As one trained in the biological sciences (plant breeding), I am appalled to learn that our own United States FDA has been so lax re testing of and adequate, accurate labeling requirements for all genetically engineered food products.

Such gross negligence not only contradicts good science, but disregards the basic rights of the consuming public in a free society.

Whatever has happened to that good old conscientious FDA which used to be there to protect us? Has it after all been subjugated by unscrupulous big industry interests as so many now claim?

Though I am no activist, this issue is of such basic and far reaching significance that it sorely tempts me to become one.

Those of us who count on you are legion. Please don't let us down.

Sincerely,

H W Graves
